

Penny Duquenoy is a Senior Lecturer at Middlesex University with a background in philosophy. She is a leading researcher in the field of Ethics and ICT, with more than 30 publications on aspects of ethics in relation to applied information technologies and is currently Chair of IFIP Working Group on Computers and Social Accountability, member of IFIP Special Interest Group on Ethics and Manager of the British Computer Society Ethics Forum. Her specific research interests focus on the ethical impact of computer technologies, particularly in relation to individuals as citizens and vulnerable groups in the application area of intelligent systems in everyday life. She has presented at EU level on this subject, participated in EU projects and has acted as an invited expert for ethical review of EU FP7 projects.

